A report has prevailed in the Camp and town this morning, that Gen'l Taylor had received orders from the War department, by yesterday's mail, to have his command in readiness to depart for the Rio Grande, (San Isabel,) at the shortest notice. We are induced to believe that Gen. Taylor has received such a despatch, but at the same time, it is wholly left to his discretion, to avail himself of this permission to leave, or to remain where he now is, as circumstances may justify. At present, we have heard of no new cause for leaving this place—one thing is certain—the Mexican army late under the orders of Gen. Arista has not been increased, but, has been sensibly diminished within the last few weeks by desertion. There are no Mexican troops on this side the Rio Grande, except about thirty men, half soldiers and half custom-house officers at Laredo. Arista has withdrawn himself from Monterey, and has retired to his hacienda a short distance from there. General La Vega is in command at Monterey, and Mejia at Matamoras. The three states of Tamaulipas, Nuevo Leon, and Cohahuila still hold out against the Revolution of General Paredes. The civil authorities of Monterey have made a public declaration, in which they are backed by the entire population of the place and surrounding country, solemnly repudiating the acts of Paredes, and refusing all obedience to his decrees. This is the only known instance in these States, where the people have formally declared against him, while in no single place has any declaration been made in his favor. Arista and Carrasco, the second in command at Matamoras, are intimate friends, and no declaration in favor of the Revolution will be made by the army where the influence of these two Generals is at all acknowledged. If the United States are desirous of causing another revolution in Mexico—a revolution embracing the three above named provinces or States, “the army of occupation” will doubtless shortly be ordered to take position on the Rio Grande—as there is some reason to believe such an order would hasten an event, which all well informed parties agree will sooner or later take place—a declaration of Independence by the States above mentioned, from the Government of Mexico, and probably at some not far distant day, annexation to the United States.
